VOGUE FRONT COVER

Three front-line workers from London will feature on seperate covers for its July issue of British Vogue. Train Driver Narguis Horsford, midwife Rachel Millar and supermarket assistant Anisa Omar were captured by Photographer Jamie Hawkesworth for a 20 page feature in the fashion magazine.

Vogue's editor-in-chief Edward Enninful said. "They represent the millions of people in the UK who, at the height of the pandemic, put on their uniforms and went to help. This moment in history required something extra special, a moment of thanks to the new front line."

Anisa Omar says that "You're putting yourself at risk by being at work, but it's worth it because you're helping people... If I can put a smile on someone's face because i', smiling, that's amazing for me. That's all I need."

Jamie Hawkesworth is a British Fashion and Documentary photographer. In 2010 he worked on a project called, Preston is my Paris, Documenting the coming and goings of people in Prestons bus station.

After hearing the station was set to be demolished he spent every day of a month photographing the characters of the landmark.

His work is grounded, playful and subtle and captures the true essence of people and place.

Documentary Photography Task

Documentary photography is a style of photography that provides a straightforward and accurate representation of people, places, objects and events.

Your task is to create a series of portraits capturing the current times. Whether that is the repetition of mundane tasks in the house; documenting the feeling of isolation; photographing homeschooling or working from home; capturing social distanced meetups with friends or family.

Select your best image and present it as a magazine cover using google slides or the website canva.
